

Inspection Before It Becomes Repair

PREPARING BUILDINGS IN NEW ENGLAND FOR THE BUSY SPRING MAINTENANCE SEASON

- Winter leaves more than visible wear on buildings across New England. It creates underlying stress within exterior systems.
- Snow, ice, freeze–thaw cycles, and salt exposure gradually impact façades, windows, masonry, and structural surfaces. Across Boston, Cambridge, and the broader New England region, these conditions place continuous pressure on building envelopes.
- By the time spring arrives, the effects of winter are often already developing beneath the surface.
- For building owners and facility teams, spring building maintenance in New England is the most important opportunity to assess these conditions and restore building performance before deterioration accelerates.

PREPARING BUILDINGS IN NEW ENGLAND FOR THE BUSY SPRING MAINTENANCE SEASON

- What Should Be Done After Winter Maintenance In New England?
- Spring building maintenance in New England typically includes:
- Exterior façade inspections to identify structural damage
 - Window washing to remove salt and debris
 - Masonry repair to stabilize cracks caused by freeze–thaw cycles
 - Waterproofing inspections to prevent moisture intrusion
 - Pressure washing to remove winter contaminants
 - Dryer vent cleaning in multifamily buildings
 - Parking garage cleaning and structural maintenance
 - Roof anchor inspections for safe exterior access
- Addressing these areas early helps prevent minor seasonal damage from developing into costly repairs.
